FIFTH SUNDAY OF LENT

Covenant-Obedience

The word "covenant" is almost too familiar to Christians. It is a word so often found in our liturgies, in our prayers, and in our mouths, that it comes too trippingly off the tongue. And yet, "covenant" is far too strong and too binding a word to be tossed off and trifled with. Today, most attorneys would advise against using the word "covenant" in a contract, because the word is so legally binding. When one makes a covenant with another, one is making a promise and commitment that cannot be broken without serious consequences. Christians are a people of covenant, a God-made and God-given covenant. When God established the covenant with us, God knew exactly what it entailed: God and humanity were bound in an unbreakable relationship, a relationship so strong it would outlast even death itself.

FIRST READING: Jeremiah 31:31-34 RESPONSORIAL PSALM: Psalm 51:3-4, 12-13, 14-15
SECOND READING: Hebrews 5:7-9 GOSPEL: John 12:20-33

Comment

In today's first reading, Jeremiah, who had seen the fall of Jerusalem, now predicts its rise and the reestablishment of God's people. Those in exile will return home. The uprooted will be replanted. God will make a new covenant written not on tablets of stone, but on hearts of flesh. In other words, the will of God will not be something imposed from without, but something discovered from within. What's so radically "new" about this covenant, then, is its universality. No longer shall God's will and law be the purview of a few "chosen;" it shall be accessible to each and every person—to all people: "All, from least to greatest, shall know me, says the LORD."

Likewise, this new covenant will not rely on the fidelity of fickle people but on the constancy of the God of faithfulness. Because of this new covenant, all people will know, from the bottom of their hearts, that God is their God and that they are God's own. This new covenant will be so powerful as to cause the God of all remembrance to forget—to forget the sins and failings of God's people—to forget and to forgive. This new covenant is ours if we but open our hearts.

And how do we open our hearts? The author of the letter to the Hebrews gives an answer, but it is not a simple one: obedience, a word most of us do not like to hear. Yet the personification of the new covenant, Jesus Christ, is also the personification of perfect obedience, obedience to death, even to death on a cross.

Only the openhearted can afford to obey. Only the openhearted can trust enough to obey. Today's second reading calls us to be openhearted, to trust enough to walk in the footsteps of Jesus Christ. Through such obedience, salvation is guaranteed. We claim our share in the benefits of the new covenant by doing as Christ did, that is, by becoming obedient to him, by dying and rising as he did.

The Gospel graphically demonstrates the meaning of God's new covenant and the obedience it requires. Only through obedience will the grain become what it was meant to become. Only through obedience will the covenant flower. John tells us that Jesus himself is the seed who is buried and dies in obedience to God's will. Then, when John relates that Jesus says, "Whoever serves me must follow me ... The Father will honor whoever serves me," the evangelist is telling us that the covenant established by Jesus' death and resurrection is our covenant if we but follow Jesus in obedient service. Here John is inviting us to claim our share in the paschal mystery, the source and proof of the new covenant, and to realize that the salvation wrought by adherence to the covenant is no cheap grace. It will require sacrifice and suffering. Jesus himself will suffer, will give himself over to death as does a grain of wheat, only to rise, blossom, and produce grain on which others may feed. John reminds us that such is the lot of all who, through obedience, claim a share in the covenant—a dying, to be sure, but then a resurrection to a new and more glorious life.

Reflection

Obedience is not a popular term these days. To our ears, obedience smacks too much of subservience, of giving up and giving over one's free will. And yet, Jesus was clearly the model of obedience. Can we really claim that Jesus is our model, too? We can if, like Jesus, we recognize that God's new covenant with us is one that is heartfelt and heart-written. We can if we realize that God's new covenant with us is one that asks no limits of and places no limits on us. Then, as heart of our hearts, God's new covenant will surely lead us to obedience. It will prompt us to give of ourselves to others, to be "lifted up" for others, even to die for others, all for the sake of the love that exists both between us and God and among all of us whose hearts God has embraced.
